Every three years, LVEDC commissions an independent review of the Lehigh Valley and engages a variety of public and private partners to help develop a strategic plan based on the region’s economic development needs, goals, and opportunities.

Summarized here, is LVEDC’s 2021-2024 strategic plan. It includes our vision, values, mission, principles, and initiatives to help guide our organization’s work and the Lehigh Valley’s future.

The world was turned upside down in 2020 and 2021. Not only did the COVID-19 pandemic take a catastrophic toll on life and health it also brought tremendous economic and social change.

It was – and is – a transformational event.

The economic change wrought by the global pandemic has created new challenges and opportunities for economic growth both across the world, the nation, and the Lehigh Valley.

Change that was taking place was accelerated.

The movement away from shopping in stores to ordering online was super charged as people needed to avoid places crowded with other people.

The availability of workers, particularly those with the right skills, became more challenging, shifting the supply and demand balance toward employees, driving up wages, benefits, and bonuses.

The unforeseen also emerged.

Global supply chains were so disrupted it ended the reliability of goods made and shipped across oceans arriving when needed.

Office workers began working from home, often new homes many miles or states away from employers.
In the transformation lies new realities and opportunities for the Lehigh Valley.

• Health care – our largest employment sector – is even more important to the economy. New medical technologies are expanding the skills needed by health care workers.

• Domestic production of pharmaceuticals, medical supplies, and diagnostics has made life sciences one of the fastest growing sectors in the U.S. and the Lehigh Valley.

• Supply chains are becoming more regional and less global, increasing demand for manufacturing in the U.S. Manufacturing is the Lehigh Valley’s second largest economic sector and continues to grow.

• Foreign direct investment, particularly from Europe, is again increasing. Companies want to produce goods closer to large bases of U.S. customers. The Lehigh Valley’s location provides access to 30 percent of U.S. consumers in an eight-hour drive.

• Office workers have moved from large urban markets to secondary regions like the Lehigh Valley because of remote work. The Lehigh Valley was listed in one study as a top 15 market in the U.S. for remote workers.

• Companies seek markets where talent lives, and costs are lower. The Lehigh Valley has one of the fastest growing population of workers under age 40 on the East Coast and is very affordable compared with other Northeast markets.

• E-commerce will continue to grow as more goods are ordered online. The Lehigh Valley will remain a major center for e-commerce on the East Coast.

• Demand for distribution and supply chain centers, particularly cold storage of food and pharmaceuticals, will grow. Through zoning and smart planning, Lehigh Valley municipal governments will need to strike a balance in accommodating some e-commerce and distribution while also encouraging development of smaller buildings for manufacturing, production and life sciences through zoning, tax abatements or set-aside requirements.

The Lehigh Valley is positioned well for continued economic growth in traditional areas of strength along with opportunities that are emerging in a post-pandemic economy. Toward this end, LVEDC commissioned Garner Economics of Atlanta, Ga., to conduct an independent assessment of the region’s strengths and weaknesses in comparison to our competition across the country. Those assessments and Garner’s recommendations for the Lehigh Valley region are part of this three-year plan.

It is critical to “know thyself.” Without self-examination and understanding, we cannot develop a smart plan for the future.

LVEDC is not a company, it’s a coalition of private employers, municipal governments, educational institutions, and every entity that has a stake in the economic growth and prosperity of the Lehigh Valley. Our goal is to ensure that Lehigh Valley employers can prosper and that everyone who lives here can find good jobs that meet their skill and education level. It’s difficult to meet that goal. That’s why it’s necessary to keep working, planning, and preparing as a region.

No one person, group, government, or employer drives the Lehigh Valley’s economy. The decisions we make and the actions we take each day decide what we will become. To the extent we can share a plan and a vision that encourages everyone to play a part, together, we can ensure a future even brighter than our past and present.

- Continue to build relationships with county and municipal leaders and other regional organizations regarding development priorities, marketing support, financing programs, and two-way communications.
